A note about the reading lists

Texts listed for each lecture as 'key readings' are considered essential readings. You are advised to read some of the material on these lists before the lectures. In addition, there are further readings. These supplement the key readings and you will find them useful resource for further study and as source material for your essays. It is important to note that policing is an interesting and contemporary topic. The reading lists provided in this booklet do not, obviously, cover all that is currently written on policing in the UK or elsewhere. You are advised to read journal articles on policing, criminal justice and criminology. There are some current journal articles on the police, available through e-journals on the Hull University library website, that are not included in this booklet. Do some research and you will find out more!

Core Texts (2 items)

Handbook of Policing - Newburn, Tim, 2008

Book | Suggested for student purchase | It is essential that you purchase a copy of the second edition of Tim Newburn's excellent Handbook of Policing. This comprises a comprehensive overview of principal themes, history and current debates and issues. The chapters are written by the leading authors and academics within the field and are selected as key readings for the lectures on this module.

Policing: Key Readings - Newburn, Tim, 2005

Book | Suggested for student purchase | It is also highly recommended that you consider purchasing Tim Newburn's edited selection of more specific readings as these are helpful at providing a more detailed knowledge of relevant issues.
